

October 2020

While he was in the UK Jean and I discussed what he would do when her returned to Rwanda to take up his post with the project. We both knew the building would be neglected since no – one had been around much to care for it. Building maintenance is a big issue for us both in the wet and the dry season and there was much to do.

He quickly organised a team of student volunteers to help him to get things back in order and ready for the return of the children and the staff once the Government allows it.

Some of the students are studying construction and have very useful skills. Others are keen to help and begin to pay something back to the project which has supported them. Not all who helped are in the photographs. I am grateful to Jean for his great organisational skills in making a budget, buying the materials and supervising the team.

Others have helped in different ways, with the food distribution, helping to guard the place during the day.

A lovely community helping each other out, it warms my heart to see this happening.

Sending warm thoughts to everyone out there. Peace and love, stay well and safe please. Meg
